

The Northeastern Pennsylvania Writing Project: A unique professional development opportunity for educators It's NOT JUST for English Teachers!

If you are interested in how writing and engaging diversity can enhance what you already do in your classroom, then you need to apply for the NPWP's Invitational Summer Institute (ISI).

"The NPWP ISI is the best thing I've ever done for myself."

"The NPWP and the Summer Institute are definitely about the people in it!"

If you are looking for a group of colleagues who are passionate about teaching and ensuring that all students are valued and heard, then you need to apply to the NPWP's ISI.

The NPWP 2010 Invitational Summer Institute

June 21, 2010 - July 15, 2010 (4 weeks)

Mondays – Thursdays at ESU

9:00 am - 3:00 pm

During the 4 weeks, we share ideas with colleagues, ask questions that relate to our classroom and interests, read about teaching, writing and diversity, write for ourselves and others, and become part of a community of passionate teachers.

Those who are accepted receive a cash stipend, Six (6) graduate credits (regular ESU tuition applies), and Act 48 credit!

APPLICATION:

Write and tell us:

- What kinds of writing you like to do and why
- What your perceptions are of the relationship between diversity and learning and why
- A question about teaching that you would like to explore

PLEASE INCLUDE

- Your name, address, home phone, email, school affiliation, address, and phone number, degrees and dates earned, and total number of years taught
- A letter of recommendation from a principal, department chair, colleague, or NPWP Teacher Consultant

Application Deadline: January 15, 2010
Interview: January 20, 2010
