CMST 290: Social Justice Communication
M/W 2:00 – 2:50pm

Course Instructor

Victoria E. Thomas, Ph.D.

Frederick Douglass Scholar in Residence

Social Justice Communication is an introductory course on communication and social justice that will prepare students to be change agents and champions of social justice at ESU and beyond. In this course, we will be critically discussing how differences in race, gender, class, sexual orientation, ability, and citizenship are communicated through popular media texts, everyday life, social movements, and institutions. The course will be a combination of lecture and discussion, and readings will be a mixture of popular and academic texts and media screenings. Emphasis is placed on gaining experience with difficult dialogues about race, gender, diversity, and inclusivity. Social Justice Communication will highlight an interdisciplinary approach to communicating across cultural differences by critically analyzing verbal, written, and visual expressions of our diverse and global society.
