

Choose your path to one of the most flexible and useful degrees.

The literature track, leading to a B.A., represents a traditional English degree program rooted in literature surveys and upper-division course work in major writers and special topics.

The writing track combines study of literature with a variety of creative writing workshop experiences. Students can develop expertise in writing fiction, poetry, and creative nonfiction. This track leads to a B.A.

The professional and digital media writing track, leading to a B.A., prepares students for a variety of writing fields in the corporate, educational, nonprofit, and governmental spheres. Students take classes in specialties such as journalism, technical writing, writing for the web, and advertising and public relations.

The creative writing track, leading to a B.A., is designed for students who want to develop their skills in the writing of fiction, poetry, and/or creative non-fiction. The coursework combines literary studies and upper-level writing courses, particularly geared toward the creative writer.

Two education tracks:

The secondary education track gives students who aspire to teach the chance to pursue a B.S. degree in English. They study literature and classroom methodology so they can become effective, certified middle- and high-school teachers.

The secondary education with special education track prepares beginning educators to meet the needs of a diverse population of individuals and their families. This track also leads to a B.S. degree.

The department also offers an 18-credit English minor and a 12-credit certificate of business writing, both of which provide students with marketable skills useful in any major.

Professional writers looking to advance in their careers or individuals seeking new careers may wish to pursue ESU's online Master of Arts in professional and digital media writing. Visit esu.edu/graduate for details.

When I chose English as a major at ESU, I wanted to explore my creativity and become an expert storyteller. The department introduced me to The Stroud Courier, which was my first entry into journalism. Working on the student newspaper gave me an opportunity to strengthen my reporting and writing skills. The English department and its professors were very supportive during my time at the university and helped me develop the skills I needed to succeed in my career. As an associate producer, the most important part of my job is creating and developing good stories - a skill that I developed within the ESU English department.

Career and Advanced Degree Options

Graduates of the program become teachers and administrators, writers and editors, and directors of communications and public relations programs.

Many of the program's graduates have earned graduate degrees in English, journalism, and communications. Others have entered law school or M.B.A. programs.

Campus Life Involvement

English majors write, edit, and publish The Stroud Courier, the campus newspaper; and Calliope, the literary magazine filled with poetry, fiction, and non-fiction. They host poetry readings, participate in English conferences, and get involved in other activities and organizations, including theatre, the student-run radio station, and student government.

Awards and Scholarships

The English Department recognizes its top juniors and seniors with honors and endowed awards for outstanding majors and distinctive achievements in journalism and creative writing. Some of the scholastic achievement awards include the Esther Larson Outstanding English Major Award, the Jim Barniak Journalism Award, the Shelby Starnier Award for Writing on Social Justice, the Martin Writing Awards, and the Robert C. Walker III '97 Annual Scholarship, which is given to students dedicated to the success of The Stroud Courier.

The Writing Studio

Established by Dr. Sandra Eckard in 2006, the Writing Studio has become the main tutoring center for writing at ESU. Each semester, the Writing Studio provides quality peer tutoring to students of all disciplines. Its mission is to help students draft, revise, and complete their writing assignments in a comfortable and welcoming environment. Students will improve their writing through guided practice, helpful tips, workshops, one-to-one tutoring sessions, handouts, and resources.
